Q: Form not in the same page in JS frame I am developing an elearning site that have an html page with a frame containing a javascript that create a new tab on the client browser and load a HTML Form inside the new tab. When I click on the button that open the new tab I get the error: Failed to execute 'document.getElementById' on 'Window': The element could not be found. var newtab = window.open('', '_blank'); var form = document.getElementById("formEditarCargo"); var frm = document.getElementById("FrmEditarEvento"); var modalEdit = new Modaledit(); var element = document.getElementById(""); document.getElementById("ButtonAddRow").onclick = function () { form.value += modalEdit.text2.length; alert(form.value); modalEdit.show(); }; The form is in a frame that is in the same page (home/frm/metodo.aspx). Thanks. A: It looks like this is a problem with your javascript parsing which I do not know how to solve unless you provide information. If the element id is contained within a tag, you need to specify the correct context for this. For example: $("").show(); or document.getElementById("").show(); It can be tricky to find when trying to debug something that fails. If you can take a screen shot of your page it would be much more helpful. [Body mass index, morbidity and mortality in the population aged 65 and more]. Creating a blend effect. The result of this picture looks more realistic because of the intelligent blend mode. To learn more about blend modes, see the earlier sections "Creating realistic shadows" and "Creating realistic highlights". Creating realistic shadows Before I show you how to create a realistic shadow, you need to know a few things about shadows in general: Shadows appear on the other side of objects, away from the light source. Shadows don't always appear on the edges of objects. Shadows aren't as dark as areas near the light source. You can add subtle shadows to any image without darkening the whole picture. To control the appearance of shadows, increase the contrast of the image. Shadows sometimes cast downward, but other times follow the contours of the object. Shadows are often used in creating the effect of depth on a two-dimensional surface — for example, on a piece of paper. Shadows can result in a realistic looking shadow that blends with the rest of the picture. To create a realistic shadow, you need to understand a few basic tools. 1. Display your image in the Editor window. 2. Create a new document in Photoshop. 3. Choose Filter ► Blur ► Gaussian Blur. 4. Set Radius to 5 and Press Enter. If the blur is too soft for the effect you want, set the Radius value larger. 5. Apply Gaussian Blur to the image. 6. Duplicate the original layer. 7. Use the Brush tool to create a soft shadow on the layer. 8. Change the Opacity of the shadow layer to 15 percent in the Layers panel. You may need to press Ctrl+L (Windows) or +L (Mac OS) to load a new document in case you switch back to the original layer in Step 3. You don't need to add any other layers to the document. The blend mode is key in producing a realistic shadow. 9. Choose Layer ► Create Clipping Mask. Now you need to darken the image a little. Choose Image ► Adjustments ► Levels. 10. Convert the image to grayscale. 11. You have one more step to add shadows. Use the following steps to create a realistic shadow on a paper surface. 12. Open the original image again
