in rat leukocytes: effect of aging.  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  signaling in rat leukocytes was examined with a  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  selective electrode, a fluorescent dye, or a digital imaging system. Intracellular  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  concentration ( $[\text{Ca}^{2+}]_i$ ) transiently increased when the cell membrane potential changed from -40 mV to -20 mV. The maximum $[\text{Ca}^{2+}]_i$  in response to the membrane hyperpolarization was about 500 nM, the threshold value for the  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  signal being about 100 nM. This sensitivity was similar to that for  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  release from intracellular  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  store.  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  signal was not affected by the presence of dantrolene, an inhibitor of  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  release from intracellular  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  store. Aging increased the capacity of the cell membrane to induce  $[\text{Ca}^{2+}]_i$  transients with a maximal response of 1.5-fold increase when compared with those of young control. These results suggest that the  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  signals in rat leukocytes are similar to those in mammalian neurons and the changes in  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$  signaling in leukocytes reflect that in other cells. “The four-year-old child, in this case, was pushed and shoved and he fell off,” she said. The family says the principal also canceled a birthday party for the child in the same week as an attempt to improve discipline in the school. “The principal told our kids, he should not be having his birthday party,” said Little. “So, we felt like we were not allowed to celebrate our child’s birthday.” A spokesperson for the Fulton school district says three administrators were suspended after an investigation into the matter. Thursday morning a spokesperson for the Atlanta Public Schools said the superintendent had no comment about the incident. The family says the incident is a continuing issue at the school
